Reflection is the process of making sense of an experience in order to learn and improve as a practitioner. 1 Often, we reflect as part of our everyday practice without being aware that we are doing it – for example, on the way home from work. Using reflection within health and social care has benefits for patients and the profession. In order to do this effectively, reflection involves describing, analysing and evaluating experiences from practice in a way that helps you make sense of it.

Schön (1987) identifies two types of reflection that can be applied in healthcare, ' Reflection-in-action' and 'Reflection-on-action'. Reflection-in-action can be termed as coming across situations and problems which may require thought and problem solving in the midst of practice. It can also be described as thinking whilst doing.

Why is Reflective Practice Important in Healthcare?

There is growing evidence from research that reflective practice improves the way people perform in their jobs. This is particularly important for medical practitioners to maintain and improve their standard of practice. Together with the Academy of Medical Royal Colleges, we're collecting a series of anonymised reflective narratives, examples of how some doctors have reflected on their practice.
