Islamic finance is a financial system that operates according to Islamic law (which is called sharia) and is, therefore, sharia-compliant. Just like conventional financial systems, Islamic finance features banks, capital markets, fund managers, investment firms, and insurance companies. However, these entities are governed both by Islamic law and the finance industry rules and regulations that apply to their conventional counterparts.

In the modern Islamic finance world, mudaraba contracts are used to structure many products, such as bank savings and investment accounts, Islamic bonds (called sukuk, which I discuss in Chapter 13), mutual funds, and Islamic insurance (takaful, which is the focus of the chapters in Part VI). To be clear: Not every Islamic savings account, investment account, bond, or insurance product is based on the mudaraba contract, but you can find products in all these categories that use the mudaraba ...
